Thinking of purchasing a new device? It's always important to consider how you will set up those devices with parental controls in relation to the age of the child. Internet Matters covers all devices with very simple, easy-to-understand parental guides, which you can find here:

Winteractive breaktimes

We all know how important it is for young people to play outside in every season, even when the weather is cold!

Our amazing astro allows students the opportunity to get some much needed vitamin D, whilst supporting physical health and core values through participation in sports activities.

The cold weather also helps our students learn how to adapt, dress appropriately, and listen to their bodies, which builds independence and resilience. Fresh air and natural light can boost mood, reduce stress, and improve focus, supporting emotional well-being. In turn, this leads to more settled classrooms.

Playing outside encourages imagination, problem-solving, and social skills as children invent games and interact with others. With proper clothing and supervision, cold-weather play is not only safe but deeply beneficial for development. We love it!
